MoIT said that with suitable business strategies, Vietnamese enterprises could also start exporting other items to the market, such as cashew nuts, pepper, rubber, garments, bamboo-made goods and electric cables.

Good prospects for Viet Nam-France trade in 2015 are expected to emerge once the Viet Nam-European Union free trade agreement is signed, Vietnamese Trade Counsellor in France Nguyen Canh Cuong, said at a recent roundtable meeting in Paris.

Cuong said the agreement will include offers for preferential tax rates on many commodities, while commitments on investment and intellectual property protection will encourage Vietnamese and EU businesses, including those from France, to intensify trade and investment exchanges.

Jean-Phillip Eglinger, the Manager of Viet Nam-France Strategies Company said France's small- and medium-sized enterprises, which operate in food, agricultural products, health, pharmaceuticals, and waste treatment, stand a good chance of success in Viet Nam when co-operating with Vietnamese partners as they can support each other to explore and exploit their respective market.

He suggested that Vietnamese companies improve production and processing capacities to create brand names for advantageous products, such as tea, coffee and cashew nuts. — VNS
